

too heavy for their opponents. P. C. McDougall officiated, and, with his hat waving frantically, gave the word to "Heave, now, heave!" in a very ludicrous manner. His men hoisted, however, and quickly pulled the opponents over in the first two rounds. They shortly afterwards disposed, with even greater ease of the Marine Artillery, and gained the prize.

Mrs. Forbes-Robertson having distributed the prizes the meeting was over.

THE SANITARY BOARD.

A meeting of the Sanitary Board was held yesterday afternoon. Present—Dr. P. B. C. Ayres, Colonial Surgeon, President; Hon. W. M. Dunn, Vice-President; Hon. Wong Shing, Dr. Cantlie, Mr. N. J. Eds. and Mr. W. E. Crow (Acting Hon. Secretary).

The Secretary read several letters from the Colonial Secretary inviting observations by the Board on the clauses of the Building Ordinance relating to privies.

The Chairman said the circulation of the papers in connection with this subject had not been completed, and as the matter had not been placed on the orders of the day it could not be considered at this meeting.

The Secretary read a letter from the Acting Sanitary Superintendent forwarding a draft Bill to amend the Public Health Ordinance as regards the compulsory reporting of infectious diseases, and suggesting the addition of certain clauses with reference to scavenging contracts.

The Chairman said the draft Bill was being printed and would be circulated. The amendment of the Ordinance was deemed necessary because it was found impossible to deal with certain points in the form of by-laws, and it was therefore proposed to provide for them by Ordinance.

The Secretary read a letter from Dr. Cantlie giving notice of his intention to raise the question of the epidemic hospital, to ask what had been done as to the selection of a site, and to make a proposal as to a site.

The Chairman said a site had been surveyed by himself, the Surveyor-General, Dr. Atkinson, and the Sanitary Board officer, and had been recommended to the Government.

Dr. Cantlie—We have no knowledge of that. The Chairman—No, it has not come before the Board yet.

Dr. Cantlie—The sooner we have notice of it the better.

The Chairman suggested that Dr. Cantlie should draw a motion for the next meeting.

The Board then adjourned, the Chairman intimating that an emergency meeting would be held next Wednesday to consider the Building Ordinance.

LABOUCHERE'S GOSSIP.

The subjoined items are from Truth of the 6th and 12th ult., specially cabled to the San Francisco Chronicle:

LONDON, February 6th.

The approaching visit of the Shah of England is causing much embarrassment to the court officials. He comes to all European courts as a guest and expects to be received with all the same honors which were accorded him in 1873. The Shah is expected to give Nasreddin a magnificent reception both at Moscow and St. Petersburg, and is already preparing for the greatest review of troops that has ever been held in Russia to take place during his stay. What is to be done with his Majesty in England is not yet settled, but the Queen is resolved not to give him quarters in Buckingham Palace again, having decided that there is to be no repetition of the Oriental orgies which took place there in 1873, when every room which had been occupied by Persians had to be entirely repainted, redecorated and refurnished in consequence of their eccentricities. It is proposed to engage a residence for the Shah, whose visit, it is earnestly hoped, will not exceed a week.

I hear that the Queen has issued orders that any noble gentlemen who may be considered to have misconducted themselves, but whose offenses have not been such as to justify exclusion from court, are to be punished by not being invited to state balls or state dinners.

When King Bomba of Naples imprisoned Theobald, who demanded that his prison rules be changed so as to be in accordance with justice and not to treat as a felon one whom the Italians regarded as an honorable statesman, Mr. Gladstone denounced him, and the British Government withdrew their representative from Naples. If the United States Senate follow our example and decline to confirm the appointment of any Minister to this country so long as Irish representatives are treated as felons, Americans many rest satisfied that every Liberal in this country would approve their action.

Salisbury and the classes have always shown themselves bitter enemies of America. During the Sackville incident Lord Salisbury went out of his way to explain that Mr. Cleveland lost the election because he packed Lord Sackville and his baggage out of the country for having interfered with the election and for having subsequently explained to a reporter that an American Secretary of State could not be believed. He has deferred the appointment of a Minister to Washington as a species of punishment. American dislike of Lord Salisbury is no new thing. He was one of the vice-presidents of the Southern Independence Association, the object of which was the promotion of the cause of the rebellion in America.

Wilkie Collins, so I read, is plodding on his memoirs, which promise to make a volume rich in interest. This piece of news will considerably surprise Mr. Collins, who has not written a single line of his memoirs, nor has he any number of undertaking such a task. Mr. Collins has finished a novel entitled "The Lord Harry."

A correspondent writes: "One of our contemporaries gives a list of sovereigns, ex-sovereigns and princes who have died mysteriously, and among them I find the name of Napoleon III, who in reality, though it is believed that the fact has never been publicly stated, died under chloroform which was administered when he was about to undergo a painful operation."

The death of Rudolph is, without doubt, an immense advantage to Bismarck, but one need not for that reason conclude that the unfortunate Prince was removed. It is nearly certain, however, that he did not commit suicide. We all know that he did not make a love match, and it is no secret that of the two Princesses who were pointed out to him as desirable matches, he took the one which a Jewish beauty told him to take, because she was the least likely to ever subjugate him. Stephanie has, so to speak, no eyes. Her husband called them eyes incapable of expressing any feeling but of wariness and suspicion. I do not in the least blame the Crown Prince for having sought his feminine ideal outside of his matrimonial life. There cannot be anything more horrible than the matrimonial status which was forced upon him. He was young, clever, original, fresh, and without standing or influence, having out of resources of his own creation to pay family bills, rest and taxes. His wife was wholly uninteresting, anything but pretty, and such an uncomfortable place physiognomy that if she had been a chambermaid in a hotel nobody would have noticed her. She was so splendidly provided by the Crown Prince that he did her a wrong thing, her life mostly as she liked. He conceived a positive aversion to his wife when she began to show herself jealous, and great as his prudence was, she was unable to conceal her bitterness of soul.

LONDON, February 12th.

We have not got to the bottom of the Meyerling tragedy. I do not believe in the authenticity of the letters which appeared in the papers at coming from Rudolph and Mary Votors, stating their intention to live no longer. These letters seem to me of a piece with all the stories told by order of the Emperor between the occurrence of the tragedy and the funeral of Rudolph. Before there was time to concoct a good circumstantial account which would hold well together, official people blurted out that Rudolph was shot behind the ear in a diagonal direction and that the coronal part of the skull was carried off by the bullet. It went out of the head. No one at all was said of Mary Votors.

We might fancy that it was she who discharged the pistol if she had not been shot in the back. Both were found dead on the same couch, and there were flowers scattered upon Mary. Does not this point to a woman's hand, to a maniac from jealousy and to irony in her vengeance? The diagonal shot upward also points to some body having been concealed in the room under a bed or table or some other piece of furniture, and creeping along stealthily until he or she got up to the sleeping pair, and placed the muzzle of the pistol close to Rudolph's head, firing up at it. Mary, doubtless, on hearing the shot just fired, when she was knocked over by the pistol shot in the back. There were mutilations, also, of both bodies which showed maniacal hatred. The Baroness Votors, I am told, calls for justice. It is withheld to prevent a worse scandal than that which has been stirring the world for the last fortnight. The letters announcing suicidal intent have been pointed out to me as overdone. Why, of all persons in the world, should Rudolph have written on this subject to the Duke of Braganza, with whom he was slightly acquainted and who lives at Lisbon? If Braganza had only lived, made a conquest of him, and to have been understood the curative mission in which Rudolph, after announcing his intention, wishes him good evening in the word "Servas," as is the fashion in Vienna. If there was murder, the murderer or murderers must have known the famille maison at Meyerling, the dogs and domestics, so as to get in without being barked at or challenged. There were several watch-dogs there and unchained. Why should Rudolph, with his great expectations, have taken a suicidal plunge with his inamorata? At Vienna, where manners and morals are lax, it would have been thought a feather in her cap to have made a conquest of him and to have been conquered in return. The Pope refused Rudolph a divorce because he applied for it as Crown Prince, and his Holiness wanted to render a service to the King of the Belgians, who might in return for it be expected not to give his daughter Clementine to the Prince of Naples. The hypothesis of a double murder everywhere accepted out of England. Some imagine that the shots must have been fired by a brother of the young Prince; others by a gamekeeper, and then there is a theory of an illustrious personage, having lain in ambush under the table until the lovers were asleep, but the curious thing is that every one out of England thinks it all right that the heir apparent to the dual empire should have been shot because he was en bonne fortune. The tendency on the Continent is to keep down gallantry by granting immunity to kill those who are caught.

There was no question that Mr. Stead was the actual writer of the article on Bismarck in the Contemporary Review. He wrote it from material furnished him by Mr. Bunting, editor of the Review. Maybe this material passed through Paris, but what I believe is that a very considerable portion of it emanated from Sir Robert Morier.

Lord Randolph Churchill's hostility to his former colleagues has apparently abated to a considerable extent, for he met five of them at a carnival dinner given a few days ago at Monte Carlo by Mr. Benson, M.P. The Ministerial guests were: Mr. Ritchie, Lord Levisham, Akers, Douglas, Jackson and Colonel Walrang. It is said that overtures have been made to him and that he has been offered the Secretaryship of War.

Mrs. Chamberlain, as I understand from those who have the privilege to know her, is a lady possessed of so many charms and good qualities that Mr. Chamberlain, who seems, in his new-born love of ancestry, to be more proud of her great-grandfather than of her, may well be congratulated upon having won her. But it is a singular want of good taste on the part of that gentleman to seize upon the opportunity of the English ladies presenting his wife with an address of welcome—which, of course, was personal rather than political, and which any Gladstonian lady would with pleasure sign—drag in his own political views, and thus, under the protecting petticoats of his wife, vent his rancour at not having been accepted as the leader of the Liberal party, vice Gladstone removed. So far as I can make out from his speech on the address to Mrs. Chamberlain being presented to her at Glasgow, he seeks to prove that there is no analogy between American State rights and Irish Home Rule.

PASTEUR INTERVIEWED.

The Paris correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle interviewed Professor Pasteur in the magnificent building of the Institute Pasteur, on the Rue Rotat, which public subscription has elected in his honor, and as a home for the great scientist.

"Yes," said he with a pleasant smile, "I think I will be able to give pleasant news to the New World. My able assistants, Drs. Roux and Yersin, have discovered the germ of the terrible disease diphtheria, which ravages in winter your large cities. I believe, in a more virulent form than it does any other part of the world. Taking the morbid tissue from the throat of a victim, several animals have been inoculated with it, and all died in due course with a disease having the objective symptoms of diphtheria."

"So far, so good; but the opponents of the animalculæ theory in epidemic disease then said that these experiments only showed the terrible violence of the original poison. To answer this my young scientific assistants, by means of a glass tube, graduated to the hundredth power, diluted the morbid tissue to an infinitesimal amount. The germ was then taken from the last crop, and a rabbit was inoculated, which immediately died as quickly as the first victim in the course of science before dilution."

"This is how we stand—we have found the deadly germ, but we have not as yet secured a prophylactic for its cure or prevention. My confrères are now at work solving the problem. From the success so far in this original field of research, I have little doubt that an inoculating fluid will be forthcoming. We have virus bottled and corked. We give away a number of rabbits or dogs the diphtheria and kill them as effectually as though they had caught it at first hand in the regular course of events."

"We have not, however, succeeded yet in attenuating the virus, so as cannot inoculate. I wish you would lay great stress on this point, because I am afraid a whole shipload will be coming over to secure by a visit to the Institute Pasteur immunity from diphtheritic affections. Tell them we are not ready for business yet, but perhaps will be in summer."

M. Pasteur then turned to the inspection of his glass tubes, filled with the deadly germs, microbes or bacilli of many diseases which flesh is heir to, and remarked, with a smile, "Our children are in luck. It will be much pleasanter to live in the twentieth century, when epidemics will be done away with."
